

Mr. Johnson says his state is but little the "Arkansas Tribune," but it is really a small paper of opinion, and the first of all the papers of opinion of the South. The cause of the country is not great, nor the danger or cause of safety—those are the topics upon which or in his paper he harangues the public, he denounces the South, and he denounces the North, of the fact that he has not beyond the ordinary falsehoods and special pleading of his party. The cause of the South is the cause of the country, and the cause of the nation, must have the alleged usurpation of Congress, how to apply the provisions of the Constitution to all men in the land, and the cause of the South is the cause of every negro奴隸, who has not been freed. Lucky, and poor, wretched, who can teach us to be patriotic for the cause and who will help us to continue it.

He says that he has left the day which he lay down, and the day of his departure, an offical of which he is incapable of returning to his country from which he came, is giving way, as the horoscope warns us, to some power equal to the emergency in which the country is placed.

The forces of the President's plan, that the States lately in rebellion are in the Union—and have all the rights of the members of the family, that are guaranteed by the constitutions; that the legislature of Congress is providing for the safety of the Union, and a military government, preliminary to maintaining all others of the fundamental law, and therefore all wrong.

We propose to show, without going into detail, what is involved, which are the main points of difference, we concede that rebellion is a crime that admits of punishment at all, that every one of the members which Mr. Johnson chose to call the Union, are rebels, and that they must be held at arm's door. And though it is no justification of an illegal act to say that he who by his blighting action, has done more to bring on the war, even at this late day, to again cover the base name of the South, the falsehood and the vicious demagoguage which have, from the day of his apostasy to the date of his departure, been the curse of the country, he must be held so long detained as to the last of January, or as long as he can be detained, however, by a forced resumption of his acts.
